Reproduction Policy

Reproductions are provided by Pitts Theology Library as a service to researchers for their private study and use on a fee-for-service basis. The library does not sell reproductions and reproductions provided may not be further reproduced without prior permission. To ensure the careful handling of Special Collections materials, all reproduction is done by the Special Collections staff. Researchers are allowed, under certain circumstances, to use personal digital cameras to reproduce images of Special Collections items; please refer to our Digital Camera Policy.

To request a reproduction of a Special Collections item, contact Special Collections at PittsSC@emory.edu. Patrons using the material in the Graham-Jeschke Reading Room must first ask a staff member for instructions as soon as the material for reproduction has been identified. Do not remove any items for copying until these instructions have been given. A reproduction request form will be provided, and specific instructions will be given upon request.

Conditions of Reproduction

The department may set limits on reproductions based on available staff time, copyright, and the fragility of the materials. The department reserves the right to refuse reproduction of any materials which are judged too fragile. Restricted archival materials or items not owned by Pitts Theology Library will only be reproduced with special written permission.

Permissions and Copyright Information

Note that permission to obtain photocopies does not constitute permission to publish the photocopied materials. See our Permission to Publish Policy for information on obtaining permission to publish materials from our archives and manuscript collections.

The patron must assume full responsibility for any infringement on copyright or for any other legal issues, such as libel or invasion of privacy, which may arise from the patron's use of the copies. Persons using manuscripts should be aware that unpublished materials (including letters, diaries, memoranda, literary manuscripts, photographs, films, audiotapes, and materials in digital formats) are protected by the copyright law (Title 17 U.S. Code) and any use beyond "fair use" may be an infringement. For more information, see our Copyright Policy.
